Ogden Murphy Wallace, P.L.L.C. (“OMW”) is a modern, multi-dimensional law firm with offices in Wenatchee and Seattle. We have fully developed expertise in every area of municipal law and water law. For example, in Wenatchee, Ogden Murphy Wallace has extensive experience working with cities and other clients on issues involving: Growth Management Act, land use, zoning, annexations, water law, public bidding, engineer contracts, general civil litigation, risk management, real estate and construction disputes, and all facets of personnel and labor law. Our firm also has extensive experience working with water suppliers and other clients on issues involving: evaluation of water rights, investigations of the extent and validity of water rights, processing change applications that seek to change the point of diversion, the place of use, and the purpose of use, conversion of water rights to municipal rights, and meetings with representatives of the Department of Ecology and the Department of Health.

Our representation of multiple government clients provides a distinct advantage over those firms representing few or no other government clients. In particular, our representation of multiple municipal clients often saves those clients time and expense when an attorney in our office can create a document benefiting each of our clients. Likewise, our municipal clients often benefit from an attorney’s ability to expeditiously resolve a problem because it has been resolved previously for another similarly situated client.

Our Wenatchee office represents more municipalities than any other law firm in North Central Washington, and together with our Seattle office, our firm represents more cities than any other single law firm in the state. We are AV rated, the highest rating, by one of the oldest national law firm rating organizations, Martindale Hubbell. In addition, all of the attorneys in our office graduated with Juris Doctorate degrees from accredited law schools and are members in good standing of the Washington State Bar Association.
